beautiful, glossy lead. But the cotton is very objectionable, and is bud for both eyes and lumps. It is eath that only half of the trees bear cotten, and so we have now about twice as many trees as we really need for shade, there would seem to be a rouncedy. If the trees were examined and those marked that bear cotten it would be eyen, doubtless, that in most cases they confid be spared very well. I would not favor commulsory in most cases they could be spared very well. I would not favor compulsory cutting of the trees, but a little agita-tion and persuasion would no doubt rid us of most of the offensive cotton that so often fills the air.
